The Best of Arabic, Punjabi & Karachi Cuisines

Arabic Cuisine spans the entire Arab World, from Middle-East and Mesopotamia to North-Africa. This cuisine is associated with beautiful hospitality and generosity. Meals are generally large family affairs, with much sharing and a great deal of warmth over the dinner table. Many of the same spices used in Arab Cuisine are also those emphasized in Indian Cuisine, which is a result of heavy trading and historical ties between the two regions.

Karachi Cuisine refers to the food found mainly in the city of Karachi, Sindh. This area has a natural harbour and has been used as fishing port by local fisherman belonging to Sindhi tribes since pre-historic times. This has helped the region to develop their taste in food as there were influences from different travelers and traders. The Mughal and Hyderabad cuisine played an influential role in the making of their cuisine, having taste vary from mild to spicy and is often associated with aroma.

Punjabi Cuisine comes from the region of Punjab, Northern India. The region is a major producer of wheat, rice and dairy products which form the staple diet of Punjabi people and also is known to have the highest per capita usage of dairy products and hence it forms an important component of Punjabi diet. The cuisine has a rich tradition of many distinct local ways of cooking, out of which one is the tandoor style.
